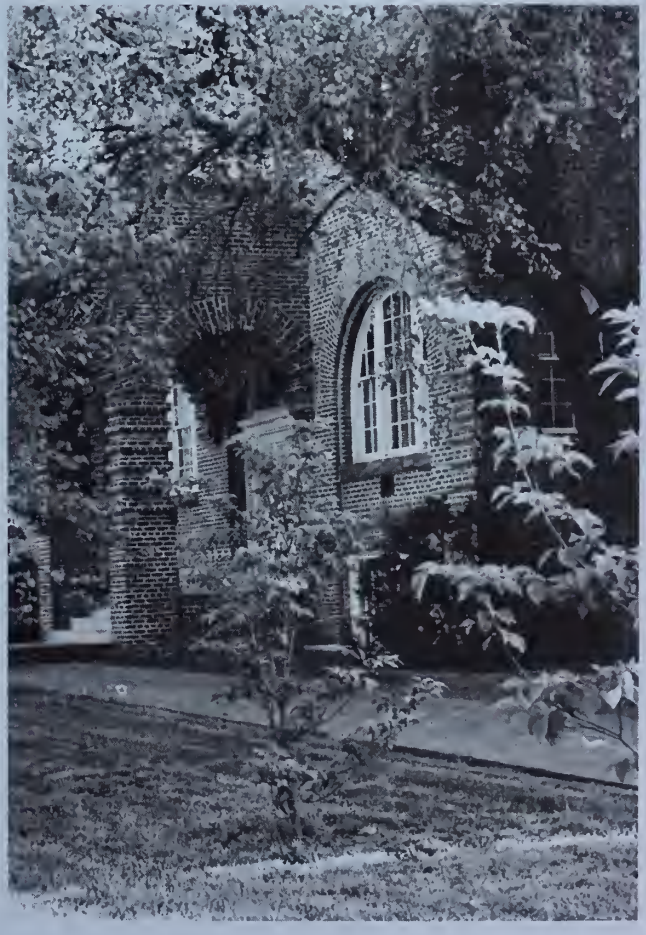
as if passing from one life into another, we began the journey . . . from the old color to the new—to clusters of life, to growing together.

we became lighted to a common goal, but we maintained a hue of our own.

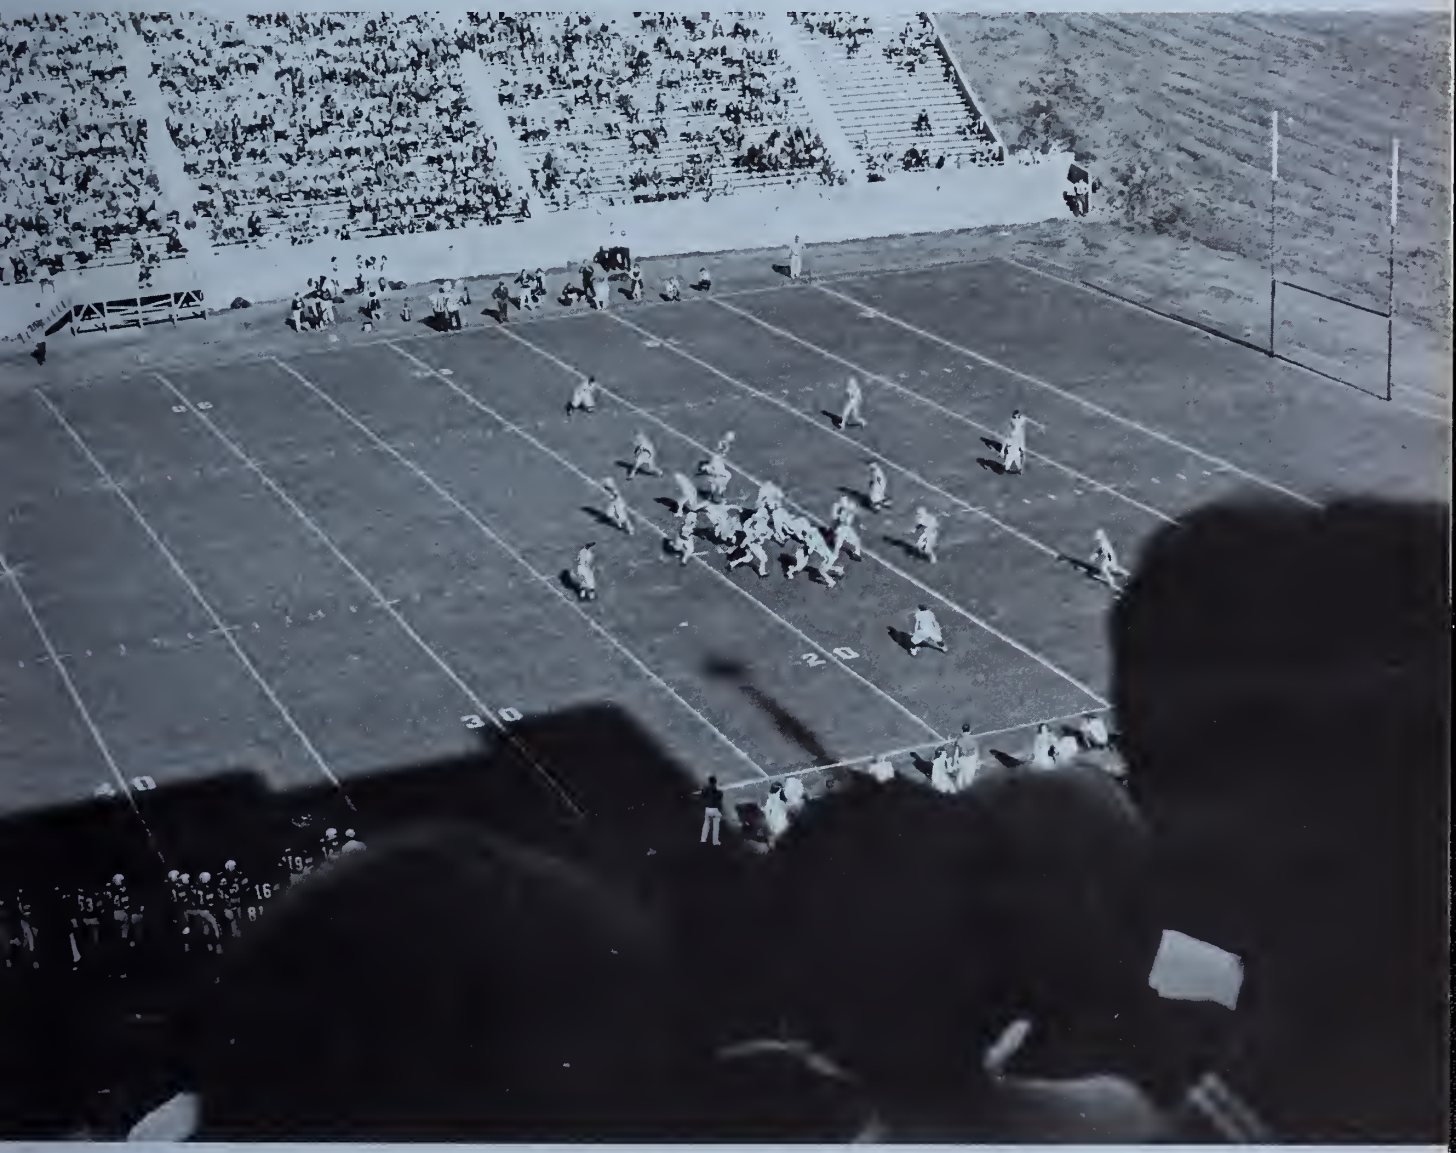
at first its grayness was rampant. it towered beyond the height of our expectations. it became the substance of each of our lives—an increment to our understanding, a transfusion of the aurora of reason.

it became ours, yet more important we became it. we wound our way through the spiral of harrelson, the maze of gardner, and the tentacles of the structure enfolded us. our element was fresh, yet pale. we had yet to absorb the word of knowledge from the scribes of our volumes, from the lips of our professors.



we were part of the kaleidoscope of learning.

a stadium full of people, full of colors; a field full of players. we felt the plays—we heard the cheers and answered, our colors became intermingled. we were indistinguishable as "different", we were with them.



an end was a beginning . . .

we stepped from our innocent world of color—inexperienced—to a level reality-oriented, but deceptively washed with white.

we began to walk the corridors, facing the whiteness which masked the indestructible colors of reality.

we remember how white it was, how timidly we diffused into it, how vividly colored we were in an environment of brick, mortar, tile, and glass.

as the days wear on, as the journey to tomorrow through our prism lengthens, our colors fade into the mauve of the dormitory, our home while we continue onward.

a windowpane rain splattered, a cheek glistening with tears—
bonjour tristesse.

Thank You

As our three years draw to a colorful close, we feel the need to say a special "thank you" to certain people who have helped to mold our lives at Rex.

Authority without respect has no influence. You worked with us as we learned, you became our friend, you gained our respect. We thank you, Mrs. Karen Hill.

Mrs. Niswonger, because you were an ever-present figure of understanding and because of your willingness to help, we express our gratitude.

Mrs. Graham, whose recognition of change as being progress helped to improve our minds, as well as our environment.

Mary, whose motherly concern for each of us, helped make our days at Rex much happier ones.

Lewis, because of your ready smile and quick memory of our special likes and dislikes, we say thank you.

Dr. Gaddy and Dr. Proctor, for your willingness to listen, your many medical services to us, and for the much-needed Librium, we are grateful.

Dr. Davis, because of your welcomed sense of humor and your evident interest in us, we show our appreciation.

Because your door was always open and your advice always sound. A trusting friend, we thank-you Mrs. Aurelia Greer.

Dedication

The best things in life are free . . . the warm smile that says more than a hundred words, the way the weak gain strength from your touch, the gift for sharing rather than forcing ideas, the zeal for knowledge but more important wisdom and understanding, the determination not to accept yesterday and second best when the answer lies in tomorrow, and the sincere devotion and loyalty to your profession that you represent so well, Because you possess all the best things in life—because you were there when we needed you, we, the Senior Class, dedicate the 1967 NIGHTINGALE to you . . .

Mrs. Harriet Poole

THE PROFESSIONAL NURSE - HER IMAGE

The nurse walks softly down the hall. She is dressed in solid white from the tips of her toes to the little cap on her head. Does the fact that she is called "Nurse" make her professional? Does her starched, spotless uniform give her the right to be called professional? No! The uniform and the title, in themselves, do not make a professional nurse. Being graduated from a nursing school and receiving a diploma do not assure a professional nurse. She must have a goal in nursing. She must see this goal, set her standards, and then grow in knowledge, skill, and understanding until she reaches it and then find another summit to climb. The professional nurse can never think that she has reached the top of her profession; there is always some aspect of nursing in which she can improve.

The professional nurse is ambitious, not only for herself, but also for her patient, never accepting second best when the best can be obtained, her patient being her first concern. She takes pride in her work—pride in giving of herself and education that those who are ill and under her care may improve physically and perhaps become a stronger person emotionally because someone, the nurse, took time to care and offer understanding.

The professional nurse does not treat the disease which a patient has, but instead, she cares for the individual patient and his problems with disease process taking second place as it should. Every man, woman and child is as individual and has the right to be treated as such. The ability to accept a patient as an individual and to adjust her personality to that of her patient separates the professional nurse from the trained assistants.

The professional nurse has high ideals in life, concerning both her chosen career of nursing and her personal life. A professional attitude cannot be turned on and off as simply as a water faucet can. It has to be cultivated and nourished until it blossoms into reality. At home, at play, or in the hospital, the truly professional nurse is an asset to her profession, setting as example of courage and a standard for all her co-workers to see and follow.

The professional nurse must learn to be humble without being weak, share rather than force ideas, serve rather than demand service, show empathy but not sympathy, win graciously and lose honorably, and know when to lead and when to be a good follower. She is the one with the extra special smile for a frightened child and the tender touch to the elderly that means more than all the words in our language. She is kind and gentle, but yet there is strength in her touch.

The professional nurse never thinks of yesterday and what she might have done. Her goal is tomorrow and the progress she will make in her growth both as an individual and as a useful member of society. But as she continues to grow, she will never grow so tall that she can not look up to someone.

COLOR ME GOING, GOING . . .

We received our caps . . .

Two to go

We're signed in and somehow managed to survive despite the academic strain.

Imagination, a little black book . . .

Who needs Money!?

Sock it to me Sunshine!

We capped them . . .

One to go

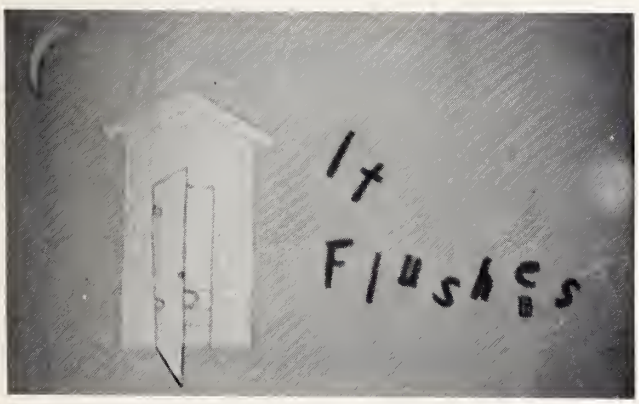
A change . . .

New friends, new experiences

The advent of new friends fills the gap of those who have departed.

Our functions usually have a purpose . . .

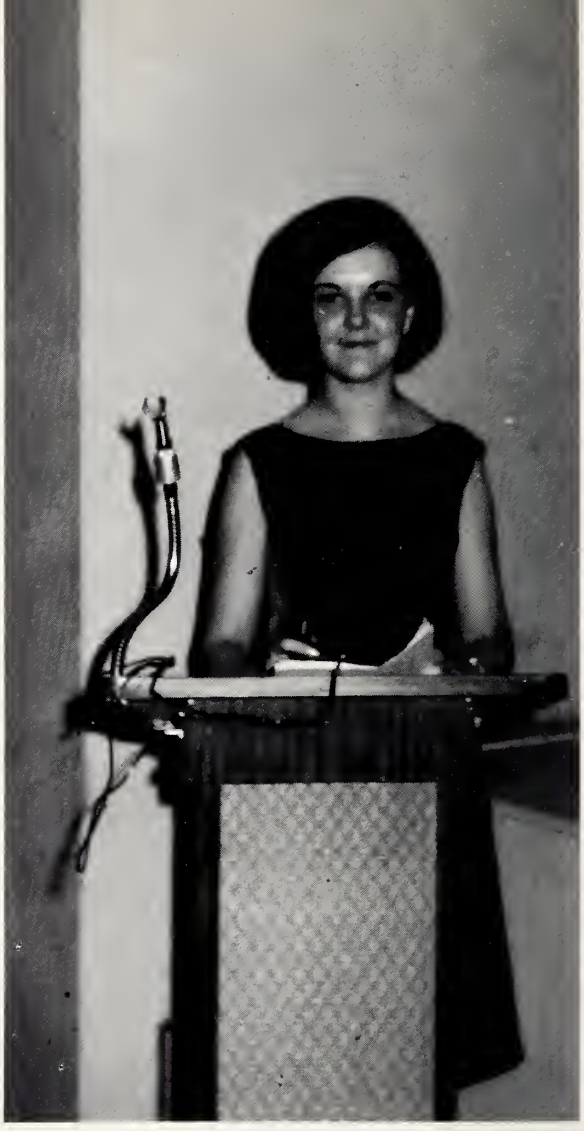
MONEY!



Could this be us?

From rags to riches . . .

And, in only 5 minutes?



WE TRY HARDER!

KEEP ON PUSHING!!
